“We are very excited for our third year participating in Save a Life Day. Our trainings and naloxone distribution have grown to reach higher numbers of community members during this event each year. Save a Life Day provides the opportunity to empower our community to seek support, learn about our local resources, and save lives.” said FCHD’s Harm Reduction Program Coordinator Marisa Shields. “We are extremely grateful and appreciative for those organizations and businesses who have chosen to partner with us in support of this event.”

In addition to providing training, FCHD will also have fentanyl testing strips, and disposable breathalyzers available at the above locations. All attendees of Frederick County Save a Life Day sites will receive one naloxone kit, an in-person training, giveaways, and information about local substance use disorder resources.

Last year on Save A Life Day, FCHD trained over 100 people on how to use naloxone, gave out over 200 doses of naloxone and more than 100 breathalyzers.

Naloxone, also known as the brand name Narcan, is an easy-to-use nasal spray that works to reverse opioid overdoses. It was previously a prescription only medication, but was approved for over-the-counter use in 2023.

“Save A Life Day” started as a grassroots initiative after West Virginia saw some of the highest overdose rates in the country. West Virginia recently reported a 42% decline in overdose fatalities during 2024. Now, West Virginians have invited the entire country to be part of this life-saving anti-stigma movement.

Overdose fatality rates began to drop nationwide in 2024. By 2024, the CDC reported an almost 27% decline in fatalities across the nation. Although many factors contributed, naloxone access is a key piece of the puzzle. The Frederick County Health Department has several locations throughout the county where residents can get naloxone free of charge. More information on these locations can be found here.

“The work that Save A Life Day organizers do every day: harm reduction, prevention, substance use treatment, recovery, housing, mutual aid, community outreach, and healthcare... These are all integral pieces of the puzzle too. Save a Life Day is about celebrating where the real change happens every other day of the year,” said Caroline Wilson, Save A Life Day Coordinator for the nonprofit SOAR, WV.

For anyone interested but unable to attend, the Frederick County Health Department provides free overdose response training virtually and in-person every Friday at 1 p.m. The Frederick County Health Department is also available to schedule trainings for organizations or businesses who would like to receive the training.
