Frederick County Health Department Awarded National Reaccreditation

FREDERICK, MD -- The Frederick County Health Department (FCHD) announced it has successfully completed a review process to maintain national accreditation status through the Public Health Accreditation Board (PHAB) for the next five years. PHAB's accreditation program, which receives support from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, sets standards against which the nation's governmental public health departments can continuously improve the quality of their services and performance.

"We are pleased and excited to have successfully been reaccredited," said Dr. Barbara Brookmyer, the Health Officer of the Frederick County Health Department. "Since becoming accredited in 2014, we have worked hard exceed national standards that promote continuous quality improvement for public health. Our reaccreditation process was delayed slightly due to the COVID-19 pandemic taking priority for both our staff and PHAB staff. Even with that additional focus, our reaccreditation shows that Frederick County is served by a high functioning public health department and workforce. Our active engagement with community partners was a recognized strength, and we know that this collaboration is something that makes all of Frederick County special. We are so proud of this accomplishment and our continued commitment to improving the health and wellness of Frederick County residents."

FCHD first achieved national accreditation through PHAB in December 2014, which was the first month when any Maryland county health departments were accredited.
